Active Listening Skills.

Active listening and responding appropriately are two of the key skills a counsellor or therapist must apply during one-to-one counselling sessions with a client. Being able to communicate effectively is an important requirement, in any type of therapeutic counselling work.

Understanding the importance of these skills, and being able to apply them accordingly, is a valuable asset for a career in counselling.

Active listening happens when you "listen for meaning". The listener says very little but conveys empathy, acceptance and genuineness. The listener only speaks to find out if a statement (or two or twenty) has been correctly heard and understood. Active listening (link to Introduction to Counselling Skills: Texts and Activities by Richard Nelson-Jones) is hard but rewarding work.

Active listening is an effective tool to reduce the emotion of a situation.

Every time the counsellor correctly labels an emotion, the intensity of it dissipates like bursting a bubble. The speaker feels heard and understood. Once the emotional level has been reduced, reasoning abilities can function more effectively.

Active listening is a technique that is used in counseling, training, and solving disputes or conflicts. It requires that the listener fully concentrate, understand, respond and then remember what is being said. This is opposed to other listening techniques like reflective listening and empathic listening.

Become a Better Listener: Active Listening

Listening is not something that just happens (that is hearing), listening is an active process in which a conscious decision is made to listen to and understand the messages of the speaker. Listeners should remain neutral and non-judgmental, this means trying not to take sides or form opinions, especially early in the conversation.
